Design and Quality
IKEA of Sweden

In 2018, IKEA published its fifth Life at Home report: a quasi-ethnographic survey of domestic routine. Though similar to previous editions in content, the new publication distinctively and emphatically clung to its digital display: presented via bespoke website, the report featured video supplements, animated graphics, interactive surveys and a host of features untranslatable to print. Consequently, the Life at Home PDF appeared reduced and diminished, with IKEA ostensibly deeming online presentation preferable for distribution.

Like previous reports, the new publication featured stories from distant, disparate cities, assembled to present an image of the global horizon of IKEA consumption. The report further alluded to abstract historico-sociological changes in domesticity. Yet, despite the temporally and spatially distributed difference indicated, many – if not most – of IKEA's commodities remained the same, obstinate across space and time. Thus, the Life at Home report staged an antagonism between difference and unity: changing historical circumstances, or diverse geographical conditions, were contrasted with a finite and inflexible bundle of goods.

Initially, it might seem strategically astute for IKEA to provide greater product differentiation, if only to adapt to new or foreign markets. But extreme mutability threatens both IKEA's brand identity and its self-understood universality. As such, IKEA's core products persist and proliferate, providing the modicum of ideal consistency by which to construe a unified planetary market.

The work enclosed consists of designs for the panels of nine IKEA BILLY products: three slim shelves, three height extensions and three wide shelves. As designs, the images might be imprinted onto BILLY or might not; the potentially printed panels, in turn, might be assembled or might not. Here, the constructed panels are presented as digital models; quickly and easily distributed, BILLY again retains its metre.

what ultimately counts for people is not political ideology or economic interest. Faith and family, blood and belief, are what people identify with and what they will fight and die for. And that is why the clash of civilizations is replacing the Cold War as the central phenomenon of global politics, and why a civilizational paradigm provides, better than any alternative, a useful starting point for understanding and coping with the changes going on in the world.
